Witness was asked when the Hohe Schule was founded and replied 1941. (2) Such a school had been contemplated for some time, but in 1941, at the suggestion of Ley, the Fushrer chose the name and set up the school. He was then shown a letter signed by himself to Henlein suggesting picking up materials for the Hohe Schule dated 15 October 1938, PS-286. He had no explanation, but admitted letter. (10) A letter 18 June 1940 to Bormann (PS-67) discussed. Rosenberg says that private collections usually contained details of particular interest for historical research, which were not always evident from the usual sources. He says he wishes to admit, however, that "speaking of Canterbury was exuberant". (16) Witness states with respect to his research that a confiscation is not necessarily connected therewith, and that while he used the word confiscation in his letter, "the confiscation is a little different from 'taking it away'. This still leaves open the possibility of returning it." (16)
